MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

There were no surprises in the Napanee elections, unless it was the very large vote polled by Coun. MacGregor, who tied Coun. Boyes for first honors.

In the defeat of Coun. Steacy the town loses the services of one of the oldest and most faithful members of the council board, though Coun. Lowry still holds the record in age and length of service, though he lost his title of "King of the Flats" to Coun. MacGregor, who headed the poll in West Ward No. 1.

If the claim is true that one of the defeated candidates could have avoided an election by dropping out the electors showed their good sense by leaving him at home. The expense of the election would have built nearly a block of road.

Only about half the usual number of votes were polled.

Following is the vote :

Big Prices for Muskrat.

Muskrat has had really the greatest advance of all furs, being up 50 cents of a few seasons ago to an average of around $2—and in the case of one exceptionally fine lot to $5.10 was certainly a great rise.

Since all kinds of furs are bringing high prices, an increased number of people have started in fur farming such animals as mink, skunk, marten, muskrat, etc., and there is no reason why they cannot all be raised at a profit, says the Black Fox Magazine.

CELEBRATED THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Shibley Were Married Fifty Years Ago Saturday, Dec. 27th.

Mr and Mrs. Geo. W. Shibley, Vansittart Ave., Woodstock, who are former well known residents of Napanee, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding on Saturday afternoon, December 27 Only members and intimate friends of the family were present and a very happy time was spent. The house was tastefully decorated with yellow roses. In the centre of the prettily appointed table was a large bouquet of narcissus above which hung a large white bell.

Mrs. Shibley was dressed in white, and was just as young in spirit as she was fifty years ago. Assisting her were her granddaughter, Miss Irene Cowan, and her daughter-in-law Mrs. M. H. Shibley.

In the course of the afternoon Miss Muriel Hulet gave some delightful instrumental selections Following the excellent dinner, which was served at six o'clock, the party gathered around the friendly grate fire where a fund of amusing stories of the days when he was young, was told by the hearty old bridegroom. The singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and "We meet again" brought the meeting to a close.

Mrs. Shibley is the eldest daughter of the late Ebenezer Ham and Caroline Fraser, and granddaughter of the late Capt. Fraser of old Fort Henry, Kingston. She was born on a farm near Napanee. Mr. Shibley was also born in this vicinity. During the early years of their wedded life Mr. Shibley conducted a grocery store on Dundas street, Napanee, and it was in Napanee their eldest son, Morley H. Shibley was born. It is he who is proprietor of the Oxford Hotel at Woodstock. About two years Mr. and Mrs. Shibley moved to Woodstock from Napanee and are highly esteemed by a wide circle of friends all of whom extend sincere congratulations on the occasion of their fiftieth anniversary.

Among those present from a distance were the youngest son, J. A. Shibley and wife, Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Shibley received many handsome gifts, among them being several cheques. One is spending some few weeks with her daughter, Mrs. Robert Anderson, Toronto. Another cheque received from Toronto friends. Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

CONSOLIDATED SCHOOLS—THE SOLUTION OF THE RURAL PROBLEM

Now that the balance of power and the responsibility of government rest upon the elected representatives of the rural districts, the present is big with opportunity for them to deal with the biggest problem that faces us as a united province. This vital problem is the tendency of the rural population to seek urban centres and urban employment, resulting in the decline of agricultural pursuits.

This movement is partly due to causes over which our government has no control and is partly due to a natural theory strongly supported by the majority of Canadians, but which, while building up and amplifying urban interests has forced our rural districts and rural population to pay the price. This movement has been growing stronger during the last half century but the farmers of to-day are opening their eyes to the fact that they have been hoodwinked, cajoled, and dragged by promise of a brighter future, the fulfillment of which there is no possibility.

Our system of education must shoulder its burden of responsibility for the part it has taken in advancing the movement, passively or ignorantly it may be, but nevertheless proving a valuable ally has failed to take before our rural population a proper perspective of life and a reasonable and accurate appreciation of the advantages and possibilities of country life.

The steady decline in attendance, the ever increasing difficulty in securing competent teachers and meeting the cost of maintenance must all be considered in dealing with the problem of education in the rural communities of the Province. For some little past it has been recognized that the most effective remedy is to bring together into one, several of the unsupported schools. This plan, on the first consideration, presents many difficulties which may be thought insurmountable, but owing to the concentrated thought and effort of some of our foremost nation builders and educationists who realize the seriousness of the rural problem and the burning necessity of solving it in satisfactory solution has been attained the consolidated school. It is fully realized that the future of the nation is in the development of its youth, more particularly the youth of the rural districts, it will follow that no effort is too great and no price is too high to pay to secure for them the best possible advantages along educational lines; and why should our country boys and girls be compelled to face life, handicapped even in many cases while their city brothers and sisters have opportunities to win the race of which they are not worthy, more than the rural communities. Surely it is time the rural voters men and women, fathers and mothers, joined themselves to protest against their sons and daughters suffering such injustice.

The consolidated school has now stood the test of fifty years' trial and during the last decade has appeared in almost every part of our continent. In Canada, particularly in our own Province, we have been slower to avail ourselves of its many advantages than the great Republic to the south. These advantages, however, are so obvious, the plan has proved so successful wherever it is given a fair trial, and those who have had the privilege of such are so enthusiastic and pronounced in it favor that effective progress is being made steadily but surely.

The difficulties in the way of a perfect system of classification in the rural school cannot be readily overcome, but the fact consolidation seems to be the only practical remedy. Consolidation or centralization does not necessarily mean that all the children of school age in a township must attend one school centrally located. Some townships may establish two or even more consolidated schools if conditions make that the wisest plan to pursue. This plan has met with great success in the United States, where a large proportion of the rural school children attend consolidated schools.

Consolidation offers many advantages. It gives the children practical equal opportunities for both elementary and secondary education. It solves the problem of grading, promotes regularity of attendance and makes it possible to secure better teachers. It means greater economy in school buildings and equipment, more thorough inspection, better roads and enlarged opportunity for instruction in home studies. One of the most important considerations is that the pupils will arrive at the school, especially in the winter season, in a condition of greater comfort and better fitted for work. In a word consolidation aims at giving each pupil all the educational advantages of the city or town, while preserving for them the possibly advantages of rural life.

This plan of consolidation, like other new movements, must pass through periods of apathy and opposition but in the end it will be found to be accepted as the best plan for giving the children of our rural communities the educational opportunities of the highest value.

During the past five years more consolidated schools have been established in the United States than in the twenty-five years pre-

Grapevine to Feed Many Soldiers.

To visitors, one of the most interesting sights at Hampton Court Palace, the historic royal residence by the Thames that was built by Cardinal Wolsey and occupied by Henry VIII., has always been the monster grape vine, planted as long ago as 1768.

This famous vine, which won the silver medal of the Royal Horticultural Society as recently as 1909, bears hundreds, if not thousands of bunches yearly, and 500 pounds of grapes from it have just been purchased by the Dowager Lady Wolseley for distribution among maimed British soldiers and sailors.

Lady Wolseley, who is the widow of the late Field Marshal Lord Wolseley, one of Britain's great fighting men, is one of only two women to occupy a whole house in the grounds of Hampton Court Palace. The house, which forms a part of the palace itself is a Tudor building, and its exterior gives no idea of the comfort and spaciousness of the rooms within. It was Queen Victoria who granted to Lady Wolseley the tenancy of this house for her lifetime, otherwise she would have been compelled to vacate it on the death of her husband.

By permission of King George, Lady Wolseley was allowed to convert an alcove in the drawing room into a shrine dedicated to the memory of the great field marshal, but indeed the whole house is a memorial museum. Preserved in perfect order are the dead soldier's robes as a peer of the realm, his sword, a presentation portrait together with an album of new-cut things relating to his career; truly a labor of love.

Population of Galt.

The report of the city assessment department shows a falling off of 124 in Galt's population, which is given as 12,424. It is felt that soldiers returning more than make this up. The assessment now reaches $10,865,612, an increase of $57,761. There is a slight decrease on income assessed.

Awkward For His Wife.

A good story was told recently by Sir Charles Parsons, of turbine fame, concerning a certain learned professor what shall be nameless.

He was, explained Sir Charles, very absent-minded. One day he saw that his wife had placed a fine bouquet of freshly-cut flowers on his desk.

"What does this mean, dear?" he asked.

"Why, don't you know!" she exclaimed. "This is the anniversary of our wedding-day."

"Ah, is it, indeed?" he answered politely. "Kindly let me know when yours comes round and I will reciprocate."

First Harvest Festival.

The first harvest festival in Britain is supposed to date from the General Thanksgiving ordered by Queen Victoria in 1854, but Archdeacon Denison held a harvest festival in his church at East Brent, Somersetshire, England, in 1843, and the famous poet-preacher, Hawker of Morwenstow, held a similar service in his Cornish parish that same year.

The most popular of all harvest festival hymns, too—Dean Alford's "Come, ye thankful people, come."—was written some years before the Queen's proclamation.

Alberta's Liquor Act.

That proportional representation will be in force before the next provincial election was the statement made by the Premier, the Hon. Charles Stewart, at a meeting held in Cochrane. The statement was made in reply to the demand of the farmers for proportional representation, which forms a plank in their platform. Another important question touched on by the Premier was the liquor act enforcement. "We can't have complete enforcement of the liquor act," he said, "because people do not look upon infringements of the act as a criminal offence. I think we have better enforcement of the act than in any other province. I shall be glad when the original Alberta act comes back to its own, with federal amendments cancelled."

Reclaim 800,000 Acres of Lands.

A triangle, comprising 800,000 acres of land lying between the Saskatchewan river, the Carrot river and the Sepanok Channel, which, for an expenditure of about $1,500,000 could be reclaimed, will be brought to the attention of the Minister of the Interior, Hon. Edward Brown, the Provincial Treasurer of Manitoba announces. This land is admirably suited for agricultural purposes and, according to Mr. Hoffard, if the Dominion Government will make no move in the matter, should the rights of the lands be vested in the province, there is every possibility of the expenditure for reclamation being entertained by the local Government.

What English King.

VIENNA, Jan. 6.—From Budapest comes word that the monarchial party has begun an active propaganda in favor of an English prince for the Hungarian throne. The Duke of Connaught has been especially named for this post. The Government party said to be indirectly aiding in the campaign, the majority of the ministers and politicians arguing that only Anglo-Saxon England will save Hungary from economic ruin.

Von Buelow Not Welcome.

ROME, Jan. 6.—Prince von Buelow, former German Chancellor, and recently sent to Italy on a diplomatic mission, has been informed that his presence in Italy is not considered desirable, for the reason it could cause trouble for the Italian Government, according to newspapers here. As a result, the former Chancellor will spend the winter at Lucerne, Switzerland.

MONTREAL PRODUCE MARKETS.

Montreal, Jan. 5.—A much stronger feeling prevailed in the grain market for cash grain today and prices for oats were marked up 1c to 2c per bushel. There were no new developments in the flour situation today. A good steady trade is passing in all lines of foodstuffs and the market is active with a strong undertone, but there is no change in prices to note. There was no further change in prices for Boiled oats announced, but the undertone to the market is strong. A stronger feeling prevailed in the local hay market and prices were marked up $1 per ton. There were no further developments in the bacon situation today. The tone of the market for potatoes is very firm, under a good steady demand and smaller offerings, owing to the cold prevailing over the country. The butter market was rather more active with a firmer tone. There was no change in the condition of the cheese market, business being very quiet in all directions.

Oats—Extra No. 1 feed, $1.08.
Flour—New Standards, $12.35 to $12.55.
Rolled oats—Bag 90 lbs., $4.85 to $5.
Bran—$45.25.
Shorts—$47.25.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Jan. 6.—With a run of approximately 2,000 cattle at the Union Stock Yards yesterday, the market for the high class underwent a relatively stronger, with the good handy weight useful butcher cattle selling up from 25 to 50c higher.

All classes of cows were higher a good 50 cents with the common cows the hardest to sell. The bull trade, as stated, was steady and from 50 cents to a dollar higher.

The lamb trade was steady to strong with the sales for choice lambs, what few there were selling up as high as 19 cents per pound. The sheep trade was steady and unchanged.

The general quotation on hogs was 17 cents to the farmer, 17¼ to 17⅜ f.o.b. and 18¼ to 18½ fed and watered with the prospects lower.

Clemenceau In Auto Smash.

TOULON, Jan. 6. — Premier Clemenceau, who is on a visit to the Department of Var, was in a smashup of automobiles Friday, but escaped injury. The collision occurred between Hyeres and Toulon. Four deputies were badly hurt.

Premier Clemenceau and party, in two automobiles, were speeding along the road between the two cities. A farmer with a huge load of straw blocked the way, but the Premenceau's chauffeur succeeded in avoiding a collision. The second automobile, however, smashed into the farmer's cart. It skidded down the hill and turned over.

The Premier assisted the injured, who included Deputies Arnaud and Reymoneng, and the Prefect of War.

SINN FEINERS ACTIVE

Pitched Battle Lasted Three Hours.

Sinn Feiners Captured Entire Garrison of Irish Police and Then Held Council of War as to Whether Prisoners Ought to Be Shot, But Finally Retired, Leaving Them Handcuffed—Secured Arms and Ammunition.

CORK, Jan. 6.—A daring attack was made Saturday night by Sinn Feiners on Carrigto Hill police barracks, eight miles from the city of Cork, which resulted in the blowing up of the building and the capture of its occupants.

It was shortly before one o'clock Sunday morning that the attack by 300 armed men began and that the barracks were fired upon. A sergeant and five constables returned the fire from the building.

The firing lasted three hours, and then, finding that they could not defend an entrance, the raiders threw a bomb and blew up one end of the building.

Rushing in through the breach the raiders captured and handcuffed the defenders. Next came a council of war as to what the prisoners should be shot. Finally, the captain of the Sinn Feiners intimated to the policemen that they felt that in defending the barracks the policemen simply had done their duty well and they would not shoot them. It was, however, pointed out that the barracks had been captured and if they were rebuilt they would be again captured.

The raiders then made off with all the arms, ammunition and accoutrements and the money they found in the box of the constables. Before the attack the raiders took the precaution to cut the wires connecting Carrigtwohill with Middleton and Youghal, but warning reached police headquarters at Cork in the early hours and a party was rushed motors to Carrigto Hill and released the handcuffed men. No policeman was wounded.

At the time of the attack the sergeant's wife and family were in the barracks and all suffered from shock as a result of the explosion. The raiders were making preparations to burn the barracks, but detected on the approach of the sergeant's wife, who said she had nowhere else to go.

Police and soldiers are searching the country for the raiders.

The Sinn Feiners in some districts of Western Ireland have formed vigilance committees to maintain order and suppress violence, according to the Daily Mail's Dublin correspondent, and are policing certain areas with armed and uniformed men.

"The committees," says the correspondent, "are particularly intolerant of such crimes as breaking shop windows, burning ricks and maiming cattle, and the night patrols organized by peaceful farmers when they seize offenders inflict severe punishment on them."

GOOD JOB FOR HEARST

Has Been Given a $6,000 Federal Appointment.

OTTAWA, Jan. 6. — Sir William Hearst, ex-Premier of Ontario, has been appointed to fill the vacancy left on the International Joint Commission when Mr. P. B. Mignault, K.C., resigned as counsel to the Board, chairman of the board is Mr. C. A. Magrath, who resides in Ottawa, and the other commissioner is Mr. H. A. Powell, of St. John, N.B. It is believed here that Sir William Hearst will continue to reside in Toronto, keeping a law office there. The position is not one that requires residence in Ottawa, or the full time of the commissioner, and the position is regarded as one in every way suitable for the ex-Premier. The salary is understood to be $6,000 a year. The principal matter for settlement by the Joint Commission in the near future is the consideration of the proposed international canal to be built along the St. Lawrence river an ocean highway to the Great Lakes, and to develop cheap power horsepower as a part of the plan.

Labor Surprised at Election Result.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Laborites were elated by the surprising result in the Spen Valley by-election, in which the workingmen's candidate, Tom Myers, carried the seat against such a strong parliamentarian as Sir John Simon, former Secretary for Home Affairs.

Even the most fervent supporters of the Labor party did not foresee such a victory, although prepared for a big poll after the recent elections had shown the unsuspected strength of their adherents in every part of the country, even in the most purely agricultural districts.

The turnover of votes has been very heavy on every occasion where a Laborite has entered the fight during the recent by-elections. This time a Laborite in the Spen Valley increased the poll from 8,508 to 11,962, while in Plymouth the Laborite vote increased from 5,324 to 9,231, and at Rusholme from 2,985 to 6,412. At Bromley, where hitherto there had been no Labor candidate, the Labor by-election polled a candidate polled 10,077, and at St. Albans a Laborite making a bid for a formerly uncontested seat secured 9,908 votes.

Princes Want Independence.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Daily News says Emir Hussein, son of the Sultan, Prince Tousson, and four other grandsons of Mohammed Ali, have issued proclamations to the population and to the Peace Commission declaring that their solidarity with the Nationalist demand for a complete independence. This is also made to the development of utmost importance.

Worth It.

Billy and Bobby were cousins, and although very fond of each other, did not always agree.

One day Bobby's mother entered the room where the small boys were playing, and was immediately appealed to by her son.

"Mamma, mayn't Billie tell me my faults?" he asked.

"What do you want Billie to tell your faults for?" she asked in astonishment.

"So that I can tell Billie his," was the unexpected reply.

TROOPS GO TO INDIA

British Will Meet Menace of Bolsheviki.

Reds Have Gained Power Through Defeat of Denikine, and British Are Meeting Crisis—Naval Forces In Black Sea Hold Up Bolshevik Plan to Secure Control of the Bosphorus.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Denikine's desperate plight and the Red advance through Central Asia to Bokhara are events which naturally create profound anxiety here, for, on the one hand, the Reds promised control of the Black Sea will bring them into touch with the revolutionary elements in Turkey, and, on the other hand, the occupation of Bokhara opens the road through Afghanistan to India.

With the whole East in a ferment and ominous threatenings of a holy war over the proposed removal of the Sultan from Constantinople, and the evident hopelessness of any united military action among the Entente to arrest the Bolshevik advance either toward Turkey or India, the situation is occupying the attention of the Imperial General Staff here to the exclusion of anything else.

Sir Henry Wilson, chief of the General Staff, recently enquired of Lord French what reductions of the army of occupation in Ireland could be made, and it is believed that no reserves from that region could be spared. In fact, owing to the almost impossible task of recruiting for the Royal Irish Constabulary, owing to the recent assassinations, and their generally disagreeable and dangerous duties, the British Government is compelled to set up elaborate recruiting machinery in England to try to keep the force up to its strength.

This is the first time since the establishment of the force that recruiting has ever been found necessary outside of Ireland.

To safeguard the Indian frontier British troops are being sent both from Egypt and Mesopotamia, instead of being demobilized, and drafts from England also are being greatly strengthened. There is also to be movement of a big naval force from the Mediterranean into the Black Sea to hold up the Bolshevik tide to secure control of the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles.

The conditions needing these precautions will occupy a large share of the attentions of the Peace Conference when it reassembles in Paris.

The capture of Saritzyn, on the Volga, 110 miles south-west of Kamishin, is announced in a Bolshevik official statement issued from Moscow to-night. The Bolshevik forces took much booty, the statement adds.

Despatches received in official quarters from Odessa say that the Russian volunteer army which recently captured the town of Prosurov, 125 miles south-west of Kiev, took a railroad train containing the treasury of Gen. Petlura, the Ukraine anti-Bolshevik commander.

Twenty-four cars composed the train, each of which conveyed gold and silver and old Romanoff bank notes. The despatches assert that the capture of the train amounted to several hundred million roubles.

According to a report on Saturday night, an attempt against the life of Gen. Denikine had been made. The general himself was unhurt, but his adjutant was killed.

Details of the affair have not yet been received.

There were reports last month that Denikine had been dismissed from the command of the anti-Red army in Southern Russia, but these were never confirmed. Later it was said he might succeed Admiral Kolchak as head of all the elements fighting against the regime of Lenine and Trotsky.

Gen. Romanovsky, who is reported to have succeeded Denikine, may be a Russian officer who has been acting governor of Siberia, commander of anti-Bolshevist armies in the far eastern provinces of Siberia. There is no other Russian general of that name in available army lists.

Gen. Denikine's fall, if the foregoing report is confirmed, is probably a result of his recent defeats at the hands of the Bolsheviki in Southern Russia. During the past autumn the Bolsheviki moved steadily northward, defeating the Soviet troops in many battles and apparently threatening Moscow. After he had reached Orel, 120 miles south of the Soviet capital, however, he encountered stern resistance which soon developed into a fight extending over a virtually continuous front 400 miles in length.

Denikine gradually finally filtered through the Denikine lines, breaking communications in the rear, and forced the anti-Soviet forces to fall back rapidly.

Minto Loses Population.

SYDNEY, N.S., Jan. 6.—More than 100 families have now been removed from Minto, N.B., to Cape Breton, as a result of the unique strike program of the United Mine Workers in enforcing their fight with the Minto Coal Company.

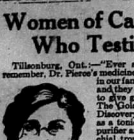
The strike was the result of the failure of arbitration in a wage dispute between the company and its men, who asked a 10 per cent. increase, while the McKeown Conciliation Board gave an award of less than one per cent. In calling the strike the latter's leaders announced that they did not propose to follow the old strike plan of keeping the men in idleness and paying them from union funds, instead they found jobs for them elsewhere.

It was at first proposed to make a general exodus to Alberta, but later some of the families were sent to Springhill, N.S., and the remainder to Cape Breton. By this decisive action of the United Mine Workers Minto loses practically its whole mining population.

Good Advice.

So we advise every man to assume a detached and philosophical attitude toward women's styles. There is no use getting excited, no use trying to change them, and no use appealing to a woman to abjure them. The best thing to do is to let the women have their own way. It is the only thing to do, because they'll have it anyway. So what's the use. Besides, it is nothing but vanity and imagination that makes men think they know better than women what is best for women.—Saskatoon Daily Star.

Women of Canada Who Testify



Tillsonburg, Ont.—"Ever since I can remember, Dr. Pierce's medicines were used in our family at home and they never failed to give good results. The 'Golden Medical Discovery' was used as a tonic and blood purifier and for bronchial affections, and it proved excellent. I have personally used the 'Golden Medical Discovery' for stomach trouble, and the 'Favorite Prescription' to build me up when I was run-down and they both were very beneficial. Mother always used Dr. Pierce's Compound Extract of Smart-Weed for pain; it also was very good. I feel safe in recommending all of Dr. Pierce's medicines knowing them to be good."—MRS. CLIFFORD MITCHELL.

Central Butte, Sask.:—"I have used Dr. Pierce's Medical Discovery for a number of years and am pleased to say it recommends it as a blood purifier. I know it has no equal, as I used it for my boy for tuberculous of the knee joint. My neighbors and friends were surprised with the results; in fact, I do not think he would be alive today had it not been for the 'Medical Discovery.' I also keep it on hand for coughs as it differs from other cough medicines, instead of upsetting the stomach as most cough syrups do it is good for the stomach. I only wish I had known about Dr. Pierce's medicines sooner."—MRS. PERCY WOOD.

When you take Golden Medical Discovery, you are getting the benefit of the experience of a doctor whose reputation goes all around the earth. Still more, you get a temperance medicine that contains not a drop of alcohol or narcotic of any kind. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery contains valuable vegetable ingredients—without the use of alcohol—so that his remedies always have been strictly temperance medicines.

"BOOZE" TURNED BACK

Captain of Sealer Had Trouble With Passengers.

HALIFAX, N.S., Jan. 6.—Advices reaching Halifax tell of a stormy scene preceding the sailing of the Canadian Sealer Algerine from here last week, with supplies for the inhabitants of the Magdalene Islands. The principals were Capt. Scars, of the Sealer, and the spokesmen of the thirty-five Magdalene Islanders, who were booked as passengers, and the climax was reached when all save six or seven marched down the gang plank in protest against the action of the skipper. The Sealer sailed without them. It was only in the face of strong protests from Capt. Sears, who protested that his boat was a freighter and not a passenger boat, that Canadian Sealer was selected to take the greatly needed supplies to the Magdalene Islands before the ice had created navigation impossible.

With his instructions from the Dominion Government in his pockets, Capt. Sears lined his decks for passengers up and subjected them to a most thorough inspection, the New Glasgow News relates, for firearms and booze. This inspection was later followed by a second. Capt. Sears then added two lifeboats to his equipment, besides the islanders' supply of provisions, filled his coal bunkers to overflowing and announced that he was ready to sail. More trouble, however, developed aboard the steamer, and in the end the Sealer sailed with a very small proportion of her passengers as booked. The local agency of the Marine and Fisheries Department is still without word of the arrival of the Sealer at the Magdalenes, but it is presumed that she has made the trip in safety.

FEAR BREAD FAMINE

Effects of Waterworks Strike In Montreal.

MONTREAL, Jan. 6.—Many of the Protestant Public Schools closed on Monday one hour after opening on account of the difficulties precipitated by the strike of the Civic Waterworks employes. Although there was enough water to heat the buildings the latter were not adequately supplied that in view of a possible menace to health it was decided to suspend operations.

A number of the smaller bakers in the city have been hard hit by the shortage of water. Although Sunday most of them were able to bake for their day's dough, they are now without a sufficient amount to make the bread needed during the week. Most of the larger bakers have put in extra pumps to meet the shortage and have thus been able to keep their production up to normal, owing to the increasing demands from the former smaller bakers' customers, they are finding it hard to keep up a sufficient output.

RATIFY TREATY JAN. 10

Reach Agreement With Germans on Treaty Points.

PARIS, Jan. 6. — The Supreme Council has decided to put January 10 for the ratification of the Treaty of Versailles. The Council's basis for a settlement on the Scapa Flow sinking was handed over to Baron von Lersner on Monday, and it was announced that an agreement had been reached with the German delegation.

The Scapa Flow international agreement was reached upon the Allies' accepting a diminution of 125,000 tons from the 400,000 tons of naval material originally demanded from Germany. The Germans argued the impossibility of surrendering the tonnage originally demanded, and also pointed out errors in the inventory of the Allies.

The Allies were conciliatory, and fixed 275,000 tons as final. To this the German delegates agreed.

"Unfriendly Friends."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Consideration of Ireland's struggle for autonomy and independence was urged in the House of Representatives by Representative Sherwood, Democrat, Ohio, who spoke in support of the Mason resolution now before the Foreign Relations committee which proposes to recognize a de facto government in Ireland.

This resolution," Sherwood said, "if adopted, need not necessarily disturb our friendly relations with Great Britain, but it doubtless would inspire Premier Lloyd George to give the largest measure of Home Rule to Ireland. Irish patriots bore an important part in all the struggles of the American colonies for independence. Irish blood was shed on every battlefield of the seven years' war."

Gave Life to Save Others

FOR most conspicuous bravery and self-sacrifice on the 11th October, 1918, northeast of Cambrai, when with attacking troops which came under heavy enfilade machine-gun fire from a neighboring village.

Rushing forward with nine volunteers he shot the crew of an enemy machine gun and turning it on the enemy, enabled his party to reach the village. He then rushed another machine gun, killed the crew, captured an officer and ten of the enemy and thereby cleared the end of the village.

Lieut. Algie, having established his party, went back for reinforcements, but was killed when leading them forward. His valor and personal initiative in the face of intense fire saved many lives and gained a position to be held.—Official Record.

Cambrai was occupied by the Canadians October 9, 1918. The German army fell back along the Escaut Canal towards Valenciennes, pursued by the British forces. The banks of the canal were heavily wooded and the advance of the Canadians along the eastern shore was stiffly contested.

The second division Canadians passed on the left of Naves during October 10. About three miles northeast of this village an old sugar refinery, strongly garrisoned, took heavy toll of the passing troops. The Canadian reached a point several miles further on, but at midnight, having been relieved on the right by Imperial troops, they returned to the position near the sugar refinery.

Early on the morning of the 11th orders came through that the 20th Battalion was to attack Iwuy at nine o'clock. While the Canadians were waiting the hour of attack the Germans poured a heavy enfilade fire on the lines, and many men were killed before leaving the trenches.

The enemy had seized all positions of advantage around Iwuy. The embankment of a railway running into the town was garrisoned by machine gunners. On the outskirts of the village a group of houses near the railway provided additional cover for the gunners, and another group of houses on the right were garrisoned strongly. Heavy enfilade fire was being directed on the advancing companies of the 20th.

Lieut. Algie was in command of "E" company. At the east end of the village he saw the enemy bringing up more guns to completely enfilade the Canadian position. He collected nine volunteers and charged the gun posts, shot the crew of one enemy machine gun with his revolver and turned the gun around on the enemy. This action permitted his men to cross the railway embankment into the eastern part of the town. Lieut. Algie then rushed another machine gun, killed the crew and cut off an officer and ten men, who surrendered to the Canadian. He then turned the guns on the enemy and cleared that part of the village.

Having established his men in the village and shown them how to use the enemy machine guns, Lieut. Algie went back to the battalion for reinforcements, returning to the attack in a short time. Running ahead of his men, he advanced towards still other group of houses on the right of the position already taken. The German gunners in one of the houses watched the Canadian officer coming and waited until he was quite near, then turned the whole force of the gun on him, pouring the shot directly across his chest and heart. He fell, killed instantly.

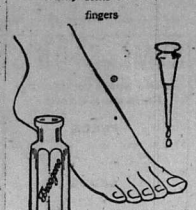
The Canadian leader gone, the Boche counter-attacked. Four enemy tanks bore down on the remnant of the 20th, which fought heroically and were able to hold the posts already established; until the 27th Battalion, advancing on the left, occupied the village and relieved the situation. About three o'clock in the afternoon the body of Lieut. Algie was found, lying across the village street in front of the house from which the enemy had directed the fire upon him. The Victoria Cross was awarded posthumously for his heroism in face of intense fire and for his gallantry in protecting the lives of the men serving with him.

Wallace Lloyd Algie, only son of James Algie, M.D., Toronto, was born at Alton, Ont., in 1891. His father is of Canadian Scottish descent; his mother was a native of Devonshire, England. Before enlistment Mr. Algie was in the service of the Bank of Toronto in Vancouver and later in Toronto. When he was able to do so he played in the 48th Highlanders band. Early in the war he took an officer's course and graduated as lieutenant, but on seeing that his services were not required in that capacity at the time, he enlisted as a private in April, 1916. He was granted his commission overseas in the 20th Battalion.

As a boy, tales of heroism and military exploits, especially stories of Clavethouse and British heroes of the Indian Mutiny and Crimean war, held great interest for Wallace Lloyd Algie, and on one of his leaves while overseas he visited the ancestral home of the Algies in Scotland and viewed the monument at the Cross of Paisley raised to the memory of James Algie and Thomas Park, of Covenanter fame and dating back to Bothwell Brig.—Carolyn Cornell in Toronto Star Weekly.

LIFT OFF CORNS!

Apply few drops then lift sore, touchy corns off with fingers



Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little Freezone on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then you lift it right out. Yes, magic!

A tiny bottle of Freezone costs but a few cents at any drug store, but is sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the callluses, without soreness or irritation.

Freezone is the sensational discovery of a Cincinnati genius. It is wonderful.

PLANS FOR HART HOUSE

WILL INTRODUCE NEW ERA AT TORONTO UNIVERSITY.

Important New Buildings Have Just Been Opened Where Students Can Get Together and Acquire That Culture Which Can Only Be Found In Community Life and Which Is Quite Distinct From the Influences of Academic Teaching.

THE story of the University of Toronto is a part of the history of Upper Canada. In 1791 Sir John Simcoe before leaving England for the unbroken wilderness wrote to Sir Joseph Banks, the president of the Royal Society, suggesting that "a college of the higher class would be eminently useful in Upper Canada, and would give a tone of principles and manners that would be of infinite support to Government." The arms of Governor Simcoe with those of eight other famous founders of education in Ontario, appear grouped about the arms of the University of Toronto in the south window of the dining hall of Hart House, which was formally opened on November 12. Grouped with Sir John Simcoe are Sir Charles Bagot, Sir John Colborne, Sir Peregrine Maitland, the Earl of Elgin, Bishop Strachan, the Hon. Edward Blake, the Hon. Robert Baldwin, and Dr. Egerton Ryerson. The arms of the university are placed between those of Ryerson and Colborne, while the arms of John Strachan appear between those of Blake and Baldwin. The historical importance of the names selected and their grouping may well stimulate thought among future generations of students who will dine in this magnificent hall. What is really significant is that the new institution is to be connected in the minds of its founders with the history of the Canadian people and is to realize the ideals of the great statesman of the past.

Hart House is a gift from the Estate of Hart A. Massey to the University of Toronto. The original scheme was conceived in 1910, and was at first intended to be a building containing a Students' Union, a hall and a Y.M.C.A. This conception has since been extended in all directions, and the beautiful building presented to the university includes gymnasia of all kinds, one of the largest swimming pools on the continent, a dining hall which will seat about three hundred, a theatre to seat five hundred, a small chapel, a library, music room, billiard room, club and committee rooms of all kinds—in a word, accommodation for every form of student life and activity apart from the strictly academic work of the class-rooms. The opening of this wonderful building synchronizes happily with the termination of the war and with a new era in the history of the University of Toronto. It will be possible to give to the students returning from military life and to the younger generation who are coming up in so great numbers, a social and a communal life which has not hitherto existed at Toronto. The ... through college entirely unsupervised and exposed to the temptations of life in a large city, never coming in contact with their professors except in the class-room and learning little there except the matter required for examinations. Hart House is designed to bring students and staff together upon common ground; it teaches very definitely by the silent symbolism of its walls that life is more than learning and personality more precious than mind.

And so the whole university will gradually be compelled to alter its attitude towards the student. He is neither raw material in the commercial sense nor an employe as the employer understands the term, nor a private as the militarist uses the word, nor is he any longer a mere pupil or a child; he is a man and not yet a grown man, and the full duty of the professor will be performed only when in addition to forming the student's mind he binds him to himself as a friend. Life in the University of Toronto in the years before the war was often very barren and very desolate for many students who came up young and unformed and received unhappily more scorn than sympathy. Hart House has set itself a great and noble task.

One lingers longest in the Great Hall with its magnificent windows and soaring roof. A noble quotation from Milton's "Areopagitica" runs around the wainscot, singularly appropriate to the room and to the experiences of the recent war. Although the ends of the hall are adorned with the arms of various universities richly painted in heraldic colors on the panels of the wainscot, it is upon the severer effect of line that the beauty of the hall depends. The oak ceiling is to be left to weather to a natural color, unstained by paint. In the windows, however, there is much of imagination, for there have been inserted at irregular intervals quarrels of the greatest diversity of design and suggestion. Indeed, in every part of the building there is evidence of the most careful thought and personal supervision. The idea which was in the minds of the donors has been woven into the fabric of the whole. Infinite pains have been spent upon details, and as in the old Main Building the architect succeeded in expressing and making articulate a beautiful academic spirit, so in the domestic beauty of Tudor Gothic the very spirit which it is hoped will be fostered among the students.

With all the appliances of a luxurious club Hart House is not a club; it is a community to which the whole body of male students will belong.

Three Hundred Inventions to Credit of Louis Goddu, a Canadian.

The majority of inventors become famous through one great discovery or invention. We almost invariably link their names with one real benefit, conferred upon their fellow men. Thus we associate Morse with the telegraph, Bell with the telephone, Marconi and wireless telegraphy, Stephenson with the steam engine, and Elias Howe with the humble but industry-revolutionizing sewing machine. These are the results by which we know them; but, in nearly all cases, men have not happened upon a single happy discovery and stopped there—far from it!

Thomas Edison stands out as a ... inventions ... of a man ... to say how many ... things he has on record to his credit, or what a debt of gratitude the world owes him for several epoch-making inventions which he has produced, after years of painstaking labor, and placed on the market.

Until recently there lived in a New England city an industrious citizen, a Canadian by birth, who might almost rival Edison in the number of patents which he obtained in his long lifetime, though not in the fame which he gained from useful inventions. His name was Louis Goddu, and for many years his home was in Winchester, Mass. Back in the early sixties, at the time of the Civil War, he was employed as a cobbler in Boston, at a period when much of the work of making shoes was still done by hand, and was, consequently, a laborious process. Mr. Goddu did not work with his hands alone; as he pegged away at his bench, his thoughts were far from idle. Presently he was experimenting with machines for pegging shoes, for sewing them with wire, and for putting in the metal eyelets all much faster than it could possibly be done by hand.

Gradually the number of his inventions along this line grew, until the list of patents granted him was said to cover nearly every operation in the manufacture of shoes, and these same machines are quite generally used, in an improved form, to-day.

In all, some 300 inventions were the result of Mr. Goddu's work, most of them being designed to perfect the process of shoemaking. He was not, however, a man of only one idea, as is proved by the interesting results he achieved in other directions. He received patents on turrets, such as are used on battleships, and for improvements in street cars. His model for the Brooklyn Bridge, which was erected many years ago, was widely and favorably noticed.

Whenever you pick up a current number of some wire-bound magazine and note how easily and comfortably it lies open in your hand, you may like to recall that you are indebted to Mr. Goddu for the invention of the newer way of binding books and pamphlets by wire staples, so that the pages open flat, without breaking apart.

It is pleasant to know that the genius of this 300-invention man—who was thrown on his own resources as a lad of 14, to make his sturdy, self-reliant way in the world—was recognized not only in the United States, the country of his adoption, but in many other lands as well. Various medals and honors were conferred on him by royalty abroad, in addition to those which he received at home; and, in the shoe manufacturing business especially he will long be remembered as the "300-invention man."—Christian Science Monitor.

FASHIONS IN FURS FOR FALL-WINTER

Pelt'ry of Every Conceivable Variety Is to Be Much in Evidence.

STRIPE IS VERY DESIRABLE

A poor excuse is better than none, and so milady will comfort her conscience as she digs deep in her pocketbook and purchases one of the fur wraps of the new season with the fact that a cloth suit or coat would cost in some cases almost as much, writes a prominent fashion correspondent.

In truth furs are proportionately about as expensive and the only reason that there is anything within ... in fashion.

Paris has been astonishingly catholic in this respect of late and under the exigency of the times admitted to the list of possible furs such lesser pelts as Mongolian goat, rabbit, coney, Taupe divet de laine suit trimmed with embroidery of the same color and taupe raccoon. Hat is of clipped beaver; pheasant tail decoration hangs down.

Manchurian dog and even ordinary house rat. As the scarcity of furs continued through last winter old furs were dragged out of the moth ball closet and worn until there was not a fur left that might not be seen on the streets of Paris.

Fortunately this brought every fur into play, for just imagine the prices if only two or three furs had happened to be in fashion, as in some seasons past.

This is not to say that there are not favorite furs this year, too, but because some of the less expensive furs are in better standing than usual is not an indication that sable, ermine or any of the furs that are always high in price are out of it. Indeed, it is not so much a question of the kind of fur as the manner in which it is made up and the color. Gray furs, squirrel and chinchilla are a shade more in demand than those in other tones.

Tails as a Decoration.

Again, it may be merely a matter of tails, and the wrap or fur piece that can count the most tails is easily the winner.

Probably the rage for tails is traceable to the rage for fringe and any and everything that dangles with every motion of the wearer. Seldom are the tails placed anywhere near the spot one has intended them to be. Placed close enough together to form a semblance of fringe is the approved method, but as this is decidedly expensive the close formation in short spaces is sometimes seen.

The dolman, more in evidence here than abroad, is very apt to show a long fringe of tails that runs from the wrist straight down under the arms to the bottom of the hem, otherwise it may run down the sides and around the back or around the bottom without any at the sleeve.

It is seen used in two ways about the bottom, either placed at the top of the hem falling on top of the fur or about the lower edge and hanging free. An ermine evening wrap by an American house has a tail fringe all above the hem, the little dark tails placed very close and showing up well against the white fur. The sleeves of this wrap are wide and floppy, being supplied with a separate elongated flap like a cape, and the collar, very ... best are masterpieces in handwork and

Stripes Are in Evidence.

Stripes, so very well liked in frocks and suits, find reflection in the furs in the arrangement of the markings, so any fur fashioned by means of dark stripe is very desirable for the large wraps that are so frequent.

For this purpose chinchilla and mink are immensely popular and the things that the designers do with the pelts are extraordinary. Where the coat or wrap is ordinarily trimmed with a collar or cuffs of contrasting fur, borders and bands of the same fur with the stripes of rich color in contrasting arrangement are used instead.

On a wrap of mink for evening or afternoon wear the stripes run up and down for the major portion, but a wide band of the fur with the stripes running in the opposite direction is mitred in the front corners and crosses the back at the bottom. The collar on this wrap, which is typically French, is very large and falls over the shoulders and half way down the arms bordered with a horizontal band of mink, bringing the line straight across the figure.

The Parisian with her short skirts wears these all enveloping wraps exceedingly well. Exactly the length of the skirt underneath, the wrap still escapes being cumbersome, particularly as the cut is most apt to be straight and the sleeves rudimentary. Either slits in a cape or very short sleeves in the coats are seen.

Neither American makers nor buyers abroad favor the short sleeves in furs, so the coatees and coats on this side are all offered with regulation sleeves.

Large Collars and Cuffs.

Large collars and cuffs of the longer haired pelts are a feature of many fall suits. Skunk, fox and pointed fox are used and the collars are cut high, giving a luxurious air to the suit. When the use of bands and large pockets is noted it is usually in close fur, as seal, squirrel or beaver. A suit of French blue velours is fashioned with flaring lines from the waist and a vest and high rolling chin collar of squirrel fur. The fur is arranged so that the stripes run horizontally across the front of the vest. The simple tailored suit without a belt and trimmed with large collar and cuffs of fur is sure to be one of the smartest features of the fall openings.

Pervenche is one of the new shades that have been captured for the fall. It is named for the little French flower by that name, which we see once in a while in an old garden in this country under the name of myrtle. It is a shade of lavender which just escapes coming under the head of blue.

Many Browns and Tans.

Duvetyn is not considered as smart as velvet for the fall or winter hat. Also one will note when scanning the collection in the best shops that there are almost no dark blue hats, but quantities of all shades of browns and tans, while feathers are greatly in the majority as trimming. Velvet shirred and plaited very closely and very cleverly handled is sufficient to distinguish some of the very high-priced models.

Two new sport hats of special interest are masterpieces in handwork and in very different ways. All the vivid colors are used in floss in a turban-shaped affair, and that each shade lose none of its value it is embroidered in a more or less irregular fan shape all by itself and not intertwined with any other color. This hat is also suitable for wear with a strictly tailor-made suit.

Farmers and Business Men.

Farming is being adapted more and more to a business basis, and farmers are being recognized by the business men of the cities as having real business standing. The expression, "Farmers and business men," has become "Farmers and other business men." Once the young man learned the farming trade by working mostly with his father and brothers; now he learns farming in that way and also in school and college, and by the study and practice of modern business methods, so that he becomes a different type of farmer from the countryman of one or two generations ago.

The demand of the present farmer has brought about a new method of dealing with him and supplying him with any available information he may desire. It is recognized that it is not good practice to load farmers with advice—to tell them what to do and when to do it—and this changed attitude brings more satisfactory relations to all concerned. It has resulted in freer consultation and the arrival at safer conclusions and more correct practices than could possibly come from working separately.

World's Greatest Cataract.

Niagara Falls is not the greatest cataract in the world. The greatest cataract is said to be on the Iguaza river, which partly separates Brazil and Argentina. The precipice over which the river plunges is 210 feet high, that of Niagara being 167 feet. The cataract is 13,123 feet wide, or about two and a half times as wide as Niagara. It is estimated that 100,000,000 tons of water pass over Niagara in one hour. A like estimate gives the falls of Iguaza 140,000,000 tons.

The Cost of War.

The total war expenditures of Canada up to a recent date are placed at $1,227,273,848, not including the cost of demobilization or reconstruction.

Advertising!

THE biggest men in the country have found that the easiest way to spell success is to A-D-V-E-R-T-I-S-E. Suppose the newspaper did not publish the news, how would the people know what is happening? If you don't publish the Store News how will the people know about your goods? You can never sell the goods people do not know you have.

Advertising is telling about your stock. The firm that advertises gets ahead, every time, of the firm that does not advertise. Shop-worn and out-of-date stock is the penalty merchants pay for not advertising.

The Coal Question!

Notice to our Customers

The price of coal will advance at the mines at least 50c. per ton at the rate of 10c. per month beginning May 1st next.

Both the United States and Canadian railways, notwithstanding the advanced freight of last year, have not been able to meet running expenses for months past.

The probabilities are that freight rates will be advanced in the near future still higher. Therefore there is no cheap coal in sight.

We urge our customers to lay in their next winter's supply at once before we have to advance prices.

NEARLY 3,400 KILLED.

In Ontario last year, the lives of 3,350 persons were claimed by consumption. This is all the more terrible because most of them might have been saved had they been helped in time.

Here is a case in point. Several years ago a man came to the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives. He had been on Active Service in Africa, where hardship and exposure had broken down his health. Suspicious of his symptoms he sought our aid. A short time ago he wrote:

"Through your Hospital a soldier of the South African War regained his health and a family a happy home."

This is not an isolated case, for many others have been restored to health and anxious families. It takes much money to carry on the work. Your gift, for whatever amount, will be gratefully received.

An Odessa Dog Case.

In the township hall, Odessa, on Monday, Judge Lavell heard the case of Walter Frink and John Frink, of Collins Bay, against Bert and Fred Compton. The Frinks claimed damages for five sheep which they claimed were killed by dogs owned by the Comptons. On Tuesday morning Judge Lavell gave his decision in the case. The evidence failed to show that Bert Compton's dog was liable, and a non-suit was directed with costs. The damage done was in one case $18 and in the other $54. Of this, Fred Compton was ordered to pay one half of the damage, and as the court was unable to locate the owner of the second dog the money will likely be collected from the township of Ernestown.

THIRD ANNUAL BONSPIEL OF CENTRAL ONTARO CURLING LEAGUE

The Third Annual Bonspiel of the C.O.C.L. came to a close on Wednesday evening after two days of very keen play, and the Executive of the Napanee Curling Club has every reason to be proud of their first effort in this direction.

Sixteen rinks competed, five from Napanee, five from Kingston, four from Belleville, and two from Picton.

Mayor Robinson formally opened the bonspiel at 2 p.m. on Tuesday and from that time until the last stone was thrown in the finals of the Primary Competition at 11 p.m. on Wednesday, there was never a dull moment.

The weather man did his part nobly and perfect ice prevailed on all four sheets.

The four winning rinks were found in four of the five entries from Napanee : R. G. H. Travers beating J. H. S. Derry in the finals of the Primary Competition by one shot ; and the final in the Consolation Round being between M. P. Graham and C. J. Maybee.

Special praise should be given to the Picton rinks. The Picton Club is the "baby" member of the C.O.C.L., but one of their rinks got as far as the "fours" in the Primary, and the other to the "sixes" in the consolation round.

The catering arrangements were in the hands of Mr. A. E. Caton and great satisfaction was expressed on all sides as to the manner in which he did his share towards looking after the inner man.

The Coal Question!

Notice to our Customers

The price of coal will advance at the mines at least 50c. per ton at the rate of 10c. per month beginning May 1st next.

Both the United States and Canadian railways, notwithstanding the advanced freight of last year, have not been able to meet running expenses for months past.

The probabilities are that freight rates will be advanced in the near future still higher. Therefore there is no cheap coal in sight.

We urge our customers to lay in their next winter's supply at once before we have to advance prices.

NEARLY 3,400 KILLED.

In Ontario last year, the lives of 3,350 persons were claimed by consumption. This is all the more terrible because most of them might have been saved had they been helped in time.

Here is a case in point. Several years ago a man came to the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives. He had been on Active Service in Africa, where hardship and exposure had broken down his health. Suspicious of his symptoms he sought our aid. A short time ago he wrote:

"Through your Hospital a soldier of the South African War regained his health and a family, a happy home."

This is not an isolated case, for many others have been restored to health and anxious families. It takes much money to carry on the work. Your gift, for whatever amount, will be gratefully received.

An Odessa Dog Case.

In the township hall, Odessa, on Monday, Judge Lavell heard the case of Walter Frink and John Frink, of Collins Bay, against Bert and Fred Compton. The Frinks claimed damages for five sheep which they claimed were killed by dogs owned by the Comptons. On Tuesday morning Judge Lavell gave his decision in the case. The evidence failed to show that Bert Compton's dog was liable, and a non-suit was directed with costs. The damage done was in one case $18 and in the other $54. Of this, Fred Compton was ordered to pay one half of the damage, and as the court was unable to locate the owner of the second dog the money will likely be collected from the township of Ernestown.

THIRD ANNUAL BONSPIEL OF CENTRAL ONTARO CURLING LEAGUE

The Third Annual Bonspiel of the C.O.C.L. came to a close on Wednesday evening after two days of very close play, and the Executive of the Napanee Curling Club has every reason to be proud of their first effort in this direction.

Sixteen rinks competed, five from Napanee, five from Kingston, four from Belleville, and two from Picton.

Mayor Robinson formally opened the bonspiel at 3 p.m. on Tuesday and from that time until the last stone was thrown in the finals of the Primary Competition at 11 p.m. on Wednesday, there was never a dull moment.

The weather man did his part nobly and perfect ice prevailed on all four sheets.

The four winning rinks were found in four of the five entries from Napanee ; R. G. H. Travers beating J. H. S. Derry in the finals of the Primary Competition by one shot ; and the final in the Consolation Round being between M. P. Graham and C. I. Mayhee.

Special praise should be given to the Picton rinks. The Picton Club is the "baby" member of the C.O.C.L., but one of their rinks got as far as the "fours" in the Primary, and the other to the "sixes" in the consolation round.

The catering arrangements were in the hands of Mr. A. E. Caton and great satisfaction was expressed on all sides as to the manner in which he did his share towards looking after the inner man.

WAR MEMORIAL MONUMENT

Mr. Editor :—

I append a list of names of men from this county who made the supreme sacrifice in the Great War and whose names will be engraved on the county War Memorial Monument. There are doubtless errors and omissions unwittingly made and for that reason I am asking you to kindly insert this letter in your columns in order that the general public may assist me by carefully scrutinizing this list and by advising me of any corrections or additions at an early date.

Thanking you for this insertion.

Birthdays Forbid Marriage.

A curious idea among the Burmese is that people born on the same day of the week must not marry, and that if they defy the fates their union will be marked by much ill luck. To prevent these disastrous marriages, every girl carries a record of her birthday in her name, each day of the week having a letter belonging to it, and all children are called by a name that begins with that letter.

The Powder He Wanted.

Sir Arthur Currie is fond of telling the following story:

In the early days of the war, says Sir Arthur, an old farmer, living way back on the far Western prairies, was feeling rather out of sorts, and, on his eighteen-year-old son, George, to the nearest settlement, 100 miles distant, for a seidlitz powder.

Arrived there, George promptly enlisted. He fought right through the war, was twice wounded, rose to commissioned rank, and returned recently to the farm, his breast covered with medals and decorations, including the V.C. and the French Croix de Guerre.

"Well, dad?" concluded the returned hero, after briefly and modestly recounting his exploits.

Then the old man replied:—

"George, he said 'twot have ye done with my seidlitz powders?"

What About It?

While polling one of the Toronto wards during the recent election campaign a canvasser, after enquiring for the man of the house and learning that he was not at home, asked the following question of the woman who had answered his knock: "What party does your husband belong to?" This was the reply: "I'm the party my husband belongs to. What about it?"

CAPTAIN ADAMS WAS TAKEN BY SURPRISE

Improvement so Remarkable After Taking Tanlac He Hardly Knows Himself

"For one whole year before I took Tanlac there was hardly a night that I got over an hour or two of sleep," said R. S. Adams, when he called at the Owl Drug Store in Vancouver, B. C., Mr. Adams served as Captain in the English Army, and at the time he made this statement he was registered at the St. Francis Hotel, 800 Cordova, West, Vancouver. Mr. Adams further stated that he would leave for the Orient in a few days to accept a managing position with an English firm in Japan.

"For the past year," continued Mr. Adams, "I had gastrillis in its very worst form, and gas would press against my heart and make it palpitate so bad that I would get dizzy and sometimes, while I was eating I would get up feeling so dizzy that I would have to get up and leave the table without finishing. My appetite was almost completely gone and even the smell of food would sometimes turn my stomach and I had to be extremely careful about what I ate so as not to suffer from gas. My nerves were shattered and the least little noise out of the ordinary would upset me completely.

"I tried medicine after medicine but nothing would do me any good, and I was about to give up trying to find anything else when my attention was called to a testimonial in the paper about Tanlac. I decided to try it and I want to say right here that it took me by surprise and that it is simply remarkable how I have been restored to health. I have a splendid appetite and no matter what or how much I eat I never suffer from stomach trouble in any form. My nerves are quiet and steady, and I can sleep all night long. I am not troubled with headaches or dizzy spells any longer, and I feel so different in every way that I hardly know myself. I am leaving for the Orient in a few days and before I go I feel that it is my duty to make this statement and let the people know that Tanlac is a great thing and that it will do every bit of what they say it will."

GAME AND FISH LAWS.

Migratory Birds Convention Act Being Well Received.

The twelfth annual report of the Department of Game and Fisheries of Ontario calls attention to the fact that there is a better enforcement of the game and fish laws now than in earlier years and that sentiment in favor of the enforcement is growing steadily. Particular stress points out that the Migratory Birds Convention Act is becoming better understood by the public generally and with the better acquaintance of its provisions by publicity, is being well received and will have beneficial results.

Plenty of moose and deer are reported in that part of the province lying north and west of the French and Mattawa rivers, and the supply is generally satisfactory in other parts of the province inhabited by these animals. The benefit of the close season for partridge has been shown by a marked increase in many sections of the northern part of the province. Quail and pheasants are scarce, especially the former.

Of the fur-bearing animals, beaver, otter, marten and muskrat show an increase, while mink, raccoon and fisher were plentiful, with large catches reported last season. Many reports of damage to game and fur-bearing animals by wolves have been received by the Department, and in this connection the superintendent recommends that a substantial increase in the bounty be made. He also recommends the establishment of a game sanctuary at some central point in the province.

Commercial fishing, taking the province as a whole, showed an increase over the catch of the previous year. Returns, as presented by the license holders, showing a catch of 26,205,560 pounds in 1916, and of 42,834,551 in 1917. The report of the sales branch of the Fisheries Department for the year ending October 31, 1918, shows that over three million pounds of fish were handled by the sales branch during the first year of operation under the Government policy of securing fish from the waters of the province and placing the same, at a fixed price, on the tables of consumers. These fish were sold to nearly 600 fish dealers and were distributed in over 200 municipalities throughout the province, effecting a saving of at least five cents per pound on all fish distributed, or a total saving of at least $150,000. The revenue received from the sale of Government fish during the year ending October 31, 1918, amounted to $235,028.15, and the total revenue received from game and fisheries during the same period was $493,699.77.

During the season of 1918 waters of the Province of Ontario were stocked with several kinds of fish in the following numbers: Lake trout, 999,000; brown trout, 44,000; brook trout, 407,500; rainbow trout, 20,000; black bass (parent), 131; pickerel, 2,400,000; whitefish, 15,500,000; herring, 28,000,000.

Complicated Watches.

That the art of making complicated watches of high quality survive in London is shown by a clock and calendar watch which has recently been submitted to the Kew tests, being the first watch of its class to be so submitted. In the first place it strikes the hours and quarters in passing, though it can be made silent if desired, and in the second it is a minute repeater. It has an elaborate calendar mechanism showing the name of the day of the week, the name of the month, the date of the month, and the phases of the moon. The date of the month is indicated by a pointer moving day by day round a semi-circular scale; an account is taken of leap year, the mechanism being constructed on a four years' cycle. The dial measures just over two and a half inches in diameter.

British Supremacy.

F. W. Wile, formerly Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Mail, addressed the Halifax Rotary Club recently. He said he was preaching the doctrine of an Anglo-Saxon entente, and he did it strongly, but in the course of his speech he alienated the regard of two British seamen who were in the company, by saying that the financial supremacy was passing from London to New York, and that the supremacy of Great Britain in the merchant marine was moving in the same direction. The captain of the British steamer Wabana, cried out, "no," to the first assertion, and to the second he shouted "not on your life"; the chief officer of the Sachem doing the same thing. The crowd then took up the protest in regard to the shipping and there were cries of "no, no," from all over the dining room, more than half the company joining in the protest. Mr. Wile did not persist in his assertion, but turned it off with a laugh by saying that the objectors to what he had stated must have "inside information."

The Pond Skater.

Insects that walk on the water by means of pneumatic floats are the familiar spider and the pond skater. The pond skater really walks on pneumatic floats. There are tiny hairs on the feet of this insect, so small that they cannot be seen, that are arranged to collect air. The amount collected in and about these hairs is sufficient to allow the insects to walk or float on the surface of the water. As each foot is put down it forms a cupline depression, or tiny pit, in the water. The foot does not sink because the air bubble that has been formed is too light to let it. A fine covering of hair protects the water spider, too, and even if it is submerged in the water it is never really wet; the hair keeps a layer of air between its body and the water. It looks like a white pearl when below the surface.

CONSOLIDATED SCHOOLS

ceeding. Consolidation gains a foothold chiefly where civic ambition and high educational ideals establish high standards and determine to maintain them. With the advent of the consolidated schools, the high schools, very properly called "the people's college" is placed within easy reach of the country child. If, as economists assert, we are approaching the point where the industrial position of a nation will be determined by the length of the industrial education of its children, the addition of two to four years to the school life of each of several millions of country boys and girls has a profound meaning.

The standing problem in every Province, with varying degrees of urgency, is to provide competent instructors for the thousands of small schools scattered over the whole country. It is these small schools which are, in general, inefficient, despite the patient, conscientious effort, of the many faithful teachers. The one grand remedy is school consolidation. General success with the small individual schools has proved to be an impossibility. With the expansion of the country, it is becoming more and more impossible. But with half a dozen or more schools united into a central one, there is new life and purpose, not only for the teacher, but also for the pupils and the whole community. This is not theory but demonstrated fact.

Manitoba is the premier Province in school consolidation. There the pupils are conveyed distances of seven, eight, ten, and eleven miles. The department of education reports a greatly increased attendance in spite of these long distances.

Everywhere that the system has had a fair trial other beneficial results have followed. The younger pupils are conveyed in comfort distances of four or five miles. The consolidated schools ensures a livelier interest, better equipment, more advanced instruction, larger school libraries and a consequent greater centre for the people. Above all, its more general adoption in Canada would afford the means of leading up in earnest and efficiently the teaching of the fundamental principles of agriculture in our rural schools on larger and more satisfactory lines. The consolidated system is proving a success and there seems to be no doubt that it is along this line we must move if we expect to reach a solution of our rural school problem.

Legislation on this subject has heretofore tended to discourage rather than to promote consolidation, as outlined in the Ontario Public Schools Act. This however, was remedied at the last session of the Legislature last spring and we now have a Consolidated School Act and a set of regulations for its operation that makes easy and plain the way as well as offering very liberal encouragement by way of grants.

The district served by a consolidated school may be composed entirely of rural sections or it may include sections incorporated villages. When different districts have decided to consolidate, an agreement is drawn up which provides for the apportionment and distribution of the assets and liabilities of the respective boards to be consolidated and may provide for the levying of a special rate for a term of years in any part of the consolidated sections in order to put such apportionment and distribution into effect. When the basis of the agreement is decided on, it must then be submitted separately to the ratepayers of each section and be approved by a majority of those present at a meeting properly called for that purpose after which it must be submitted to the Minister of Education for his approval. Five trustees are elected by ballot from the ratepayers of the consolidated sections. Upon the election of this Board all the separate Boards are dissolved and the new Board has full control of all the separate schools until the new central school is opened, when the old buildings and their property not required for the new school shall be disposed of and the proceeds applied according to the terms of the agreement. The site chosen for the new school and the plans must be submitted to the minister for his approval.

All the pupils living more than a mile from the new school must be transported at the public expense. The grants provided from under the Act are very generous and very liberal. A fixed grant of $2,000.00 for every school in operation before Dec. 22nd, 1921, twenty per cent. Ninety-five per cent. or thirty per cent (according to the assessment of the section of the cost of the building up to a maximum of $6,000 is granted. A special grant of $2,000 is given by the Department of Agriculture where a community hall is embodied in the building. Where the cost of transportation is more than five but less than ten mills, twenty five per cent of the cost is paid and in all other cases thirty per cent is paid. All consolidated schools shall share in fixed grants grants on salaries, and certificates of teachers, grants on equipment and accommodation besides special grants for libraries household science, agriculture etc. There is a special grant of twenty five per cent of the value of the ordinary equipment and a special grant of forty per cent in the first year and twenty per cent in each of the three following years of the value of the extra consolidated school equipment. A fixed grant of $100 will be paid for each teacher employed at a salary of $800 or over. No township grant cannot be less and may be more than that paid to separate sections if the number of teachers is increased. Where a continuation school is established it shall share in all the Legislative and county grants provided for such schools. The best plan to follow where a community wishes to consider consolidation is to call a meeting at some central point and secure a speaker to discuss the question. This can be arranged through the Inspector and the Department of Education will gladly send speakers to explain the plan and answer questions.

Without doubt the more fully the consolidation plan is understood, and the wider the knowledge of its working obtained by the people, the more anxious will they be to accept it and profit by its many and decided advantages.

MONTREAL

Old Days Compared With City That Prince of Wales Visited.

Reign on, majestic Ville-Marie!
Spread wide thy ample robes of state;
The heralds cry that thou art great,
And proud are thy young sons of thee,
Mistress of half a continent,
Thou risest from thy girlhood's rest;
We see thee conscious heave thy breast
And feel thy rank and thy descent.

Sprung of the saint and chevalier!
And with the Scarlet Tunic wed;
Mount Royal's crown upon thy head;
And past thy footstool, broad and clear,
St. Lawrence sweeping to the sea;
Reign on, majestic Ville-Marie!

The city of a million!

That is what Montreal is reaching out to be not, perhaps, through reasoned purpose so much as by the natural and inevitable factors in the case.

When the grandfather of the present Prince of Wales visited Montreal, points out the Gazette, the population was 70,000 people. All was country above St. Catharine street or thereabouts. In 1860 the then prince worshipped in Christ Church Cathedral; and that sacred edifice had been built upon ground over which the boys used to shoot snipe.

A lady of the time, remonstrating with her husband for having bought a house west of McGill College avenue, said that she was not going to live in the country.

McGill University was the outstanding feature of the West End of the city at the time of the visit of the Prince of Wales.

The grounds originally went down to St. Catherine street. Few, indeed, were the buildings; but Sir William Dawson used to say of it, even in the primitive and restricted days, that it was "a beam in darkness"; adding—let it grow!

None of the great buildings which now dot the campus were in evidence at the time of the Prince's visit; but, nevertheless, the city was finding its soul.

Education, which had been neglected, was beginning to be systematized; the fame of McGill was spreading; music was cultivated in intimate and charming circles—small, indeed, but select, and which, removed from the clamors of trade, was a means of grace in the residential sections. The great competitive enterprises made possible by Confederation, which came to pass later, had still to be born; and leisure was possible in a small world and an easy day.

The citizens struggled home at night by the fitful glimmer of the gas lamp, situated at widely separated intervals of 100 yards on streets. If one were at all under the weather he ran the risk of imminent death. People, however, as a rule, they would be out like provided themselves with lanterns; and it was a common thing to wear these lanterns at the side when one got out of the theatre and had some distance to go. The quivering lights seemed to add to the Cimmerian gloom, while the condition of the streets was beyond description.

An "old residenter" remarked to the Gazette recently that it was as much as your life was worth to slip off the sidewalk and be engulfed in the mud of the streets. This especially applied to Craig street, off which Cote street went northward — Traditional old street where the Theatre Royal held forth and witnessed the triumph of a Siddons, a Sothern (Sam), a Booth and the leading lights of Themis, in the palmy days of the old playhouse, when Shakespeare and the legitimate drama occupied the boards, when the "gods" were critical, and the general public was the classic.

When the theatre was over the people, if it happened to be a dark night, trimmed and lighted their lanterns and wended their way homewards; but the younger element loved to stay behind and pay a visit to the old historic beer garden at the corner of Cote and Craig streets. There the artists mingled with the common herd and imbibed porter and beer and sausages, told stories, danced and played and proved that

The best of all ways to lengthen your days
Is to steal a few hours from the night, my dear.

Had a powerful tramway company then threatened a rise in price of tickets it would not have mattered to the people, who lived in what we would now call the centre of the city.

They could and would walk. There was no distance then in a city in respect of whose dimensions the Hotel Dieu was deemed to be out of civic bounds.

To-day the threat of a rise in the price of tickets occasions something like a panic. The city has been made over. It is low and adventurous. It has pushed out and out, and to-day many thousands of people travel from five to twenty miles every day to and from their work.

Ste. Anne's is considered at the elbow. Hudson, fifty miles distance, is no hardship. St. Eustache is even considered a suburb. Great populations east and west and north live in what was the country a few years ago, and are dependent on the cars.
—W. B. Lighthall.

Hard on the Plumber.

"Conscription has, maybe, saved the country," growled the Tommie, "but what I object to is the company it drives a man into. I'm a plumber by trade and an honest workman, yet I'm compelled to suffer the society of such professionals as a lawyer, a barrister and an auctioneer." "Not a bad selection at that, Bill," remarked his friends. "Oh, maybe not in a way; but when the minister and the lawyer start an argument on Egyptian law in the middle of the night across half a dozen beds, what chance has even a plumber of stopping the gas leak?"

North of Fifty-Three

By Bertrand W. Sinclair

"Oh Bill," Hazel Called from the Bow. "Look!"

"Is that truly all gold, Bill?" she whispered incredulously.

"It certainly is—as good gold as ever went into the mint," he assured. "All laid in a nice little nest on this shelf of rock. That's a real, honest pocket. And a well-lined one, if you ask me."

"My goodness!" she murmured. "There might be wagonloads of it in this creek."

"There might, but it isn't likely," Bill shook his head. "This is a almonpure pocket, and it would keep a graduate mineralogist guessing to say how it got here, because it's a different proposition from the wash gold in the creek bed. It's rich placer ground, at that—but this pocket's almost unbelievable. Must be forty pounds of gold there. And you found it. You're the original mascot, little person."

He bestowed a bearlike hug upon her.

"Now what?" she asked. "It hardly seems real to pick up several thousand dollars in half an hour or so like this. What will we do?"

"Do? Why, bless your dear soul," he laughed. "We'll just consider ourselves extra lucky, and keep right on with the game till the high water makes us quit."

Which was a contingency nearer at hand than even Bill, with a first-hand knowledge of the North's vagaries in the way of flood, quite anticipated.

Three days after the finding of the pocket the whole floor of the creek was awash. His rocker went downstream overnight. When Bill at last had he rolled himself a cigarette, and, putting one long arm across his wife's shoulders, said whimsically:

"What d'you say we start home?"

CHAPTER XIII.

The Stress of the Trail.

Roaring Bill dumped his second pack on the summit of the Klappan, and looked away to where the valley that opened out of the basin showed its blurred hollow in the distance. But he uttered no useless regrets. With horses they could have ridden south through a rolling country, where every stretch of timber gave on a grass-grown level. Instead, they were forced back over the rugged route by which they had crossed the range the summer before. Grub, bedding, furs and gold totaled two hundred pounds. On his sturdy shoulders Bill could pack half that weight. For his wife the thing was a physical impossibility, even had he permitted her so to try. Hence every mile advanced meant that he doubled the distance, relaying from one camp to the next. They cut their bedding to a blanket apiece, and that was Hazel's load—all he would allow her to carry.

"You're no pack mule, little person," he would say. "It don't hurt me. I've done this for years."

But even with abnormal strength and endurance, it was killing work to ouck those ragged slopes with a heavy load. Only by terrible, unremitting effort could he advance any appreciable distance. They were footsore, and their bodies ached with weariness that verged on pain when they gained the pass that cut the summit of the Klappan range.

"Well, we're over the hump," Bill remarked thankfully. "It's a downhill road to the Skeena. I don't think it's more than fifty or sixty miles to where we can take to the water."

They made better time on the western slope, but the journey became a matter of sheer endurance. Food was scanty—flour and salt and tea; with meat and fish got by the way. And the black flies and mosquitoes swarmed about them maddeningly day and night.

So they came at last to the Skeena, and Hazel's heart misgave her when she took note of its swirling reaches, the sinuous eddies—a deep, swift, treacherous stream. But Bill rested overnight, and in the morning sought and felled a sizable cedar, and began to hew. Slowly the thick trunk shaped itself to the form of a boat under the steady swing of his ax.

In a week it was finished. They loaded the sack of gold, the bundle of furs, their meager camp outfit, amid-ships, and swung off into the stream.

The Skeena drops fifteen hundred feet in a hundred miles. Wherefore there are rapids, boiling stretches of white water in which many a good canoe has come to grief. Some of these they ran at imminent peril. Over the worst they lined the canoe from the bank. And in the second week of July they brought up at the head of Kisplox Canon. Hazelton lay a few miles below. But the Kisplox stayed them, a sluice box cut through old stone, in which the waters raged with a deafening roar. No man ventured into that wild gorge. They abandoned the dugout. Bill slung the sack of gold and the bale of furs on his back.

"It's the last lap, Hazel," said he. "We'll leave the rest of it for the first Siwash that happens along."

So they set out bravely to trudge the remaining distance. And as the fortunes of the trail sometimes befall, they raised an Indian camp on the bank of the river at the mouth of the canon. A ten-dollar bill made them possessors of another canoe, and an hour later the roofs of Hazelton cropped up above the bank.

"Oh, Bill," Hazel called from the bow. "Look! There's the same old steamer tied to the same old bank. We've been gone a year, and yet the world hasn't changed a mite. I wonder if Hazelton has taken a flip van your life and leave it in a country, where there's nothing but woods and eternal silence—but we've got around twenty thousand dollars to show for it, Hazel. And, one can't get something for nothing. There's a price mark on it somewhere, always. Be my good little pal—and see if you can't make one of these stores dig up a white waist and a black skirt, like you had on the first time I saw you."

He kissed her, and went quickly out. And after a long time of sober staring at her image in the glass Hazel shook herself impatiently.

"I'm a silly, selfish, incompetent little beast," she whispered. "Bill ought to thump me, instead of being kind. I can't do anything, and I don't know much, and I'm a deadweight for looks right now. And I started out to be a real partner."

She wiped an errant tear away, and made her way to a store. The stock of ready-made clothing drove her to despair. It seemed that what women resided in Hazelton must invariably dress in Mother Hubbard gowns of cheap cotton print with other garments to match. But eventually they found for her undergarments of a sort, a waist and skirt, and a comfortable pair of shoes. Hats, as a matter of course, would understand, there were none. And in default of such she stuck to the gray felt sombrero she had worn into the Klappan and out again—which, in truth, became her very well, when tilted at the proper angle above her heavy black hair. Then she went back to the hotel, and sought a bathroom.

Returning from this she found Bill, a Bill all shaved and shorn, unloading himself of sundry packages of new attire.

"Aha, everything is lovely," he greeted. "Old Hack jumped at the pelts, and paid a fat price for the lot. Also the ranch deal has gone through. He's a prince, old Hack. Sent up a man and had it surveyed and classified and the deed waiting for me. And—oh, say, here's a letter for you."

"For me? Oh, yes," as she looked at the handwriting and postmark. "I wrote to Loraine Marsh when we were going north. Good heavens, look at the date—it's been here since last September!"

"Hackaberry knew where we were," Bill explained. "Sometimes in camps like this they hold mail two or three years for men that have gone into the interior."

She put aside the letter, and dressed while Bill had his bath. Then, with the smoke and grime of a hard trail obliterated, and with decent clothes upon them, they sought the dining-room. There, while they waited to be served, Hazel read Loraine Marsh's letter, and passed it to Bill with a self-conscious little laugh.

"There's an invitation there we might accept," she said casually.

He returned the letter as the waitress brought their food.

"Wouldn't it be nice to take a trip home?" Hazel suggested thoughtfully. "I'd love to."

"We are going home," Bill reminded gently.

"Oh, of course," she agreed. "I mean to Cranston. I'd like to go back there with you for a while, just to—just to rest."

"To show 'em," he supplied laconically.

"Oh, Bill!" she pouted.

Nevertheless, she could not deny that there was a measure of truth in his brief remark. She did want to "show 'em."

She looked across the table at her husband, and thought to herself with proud satisfaction that she had done well. Viewed from any angle whatsoever, Bill Wagstaff stood head and shoulders above all the men she had ever known. Big, physically and mentally, clean-minded and capable—indubitably she had captured a lion, and, though she might have denied stoutly the imputation, she wanted Granville to see her lion and hear him roar.

"Still thinking Granville?" Bill queried, when they had finished an uncommonly silent meal.

Hazel flushed slightly. She was, and momentarily she felt that she should have been thinking of their little nest up by Pine River Pass instead. She knew that Bill was homing to the cabin. She herself regarded it with affection, but of a different degree from his. Her mind was more occupied with another, more palpitating circle of life than was possible in the cabin, much as she appreciated its green and peaceful beauty. The sack of gold lying in the bank had somehow opened up far-flung possibilities. She sloped the interval of affairs which she knew must be attended to, and betook herself and Bill to Granville, thence to the bigger, older cities, where money showed in the roles of command, where all things were possible to those who had the price.

But she was beginning to know this husband of hers too well to propose anything of the sort abruptly. Behind his tenderness and patience she had sometimes glimpsed something inflexible, unyielding as the wilderness he loved. So she merely answered:

"In a way, yes."

"Let's go outside where I can smoke a decent cigar on top of this fairly decent meal," he suggested. "Then we'll figure on the next move. I think about twenty-four hours in Hazelton will do me. There's a steamer goes down-river tomorrow."

* * * * *

Four days later they stood on the deck of a grimy little steamer breasting the outgoing tide that surged through the First Narrows. Presently they swung around Brockton Point, and Vancouver spread its peninsular clutter before them. Tugs and launches puffed by, about their harbor traffic. A ferry clustered black with people hurried across the inlet. Even above the harbor noises, across the intervening distance they could hear the vibrant hum of the industrial hive.

She had no regrets when Bill refined their stay to the time necessary to turn his gold into a bank draft, and allow her to buy a trunkful more or less, of pretty clothes. Then they bore on eastward and halted at Ashcroft and Bill refused to commit himself positively to a date for the eastern pilgrimage. He wanted to see the cabin again. For that matter she did, too—so that their sojourn there did not carry them over another winter.

From Ashcroft an auto stage whirled them swiftly into the heart of the Cariboo country—to Quesnelle, where Bill purchased four head of horses in an afternoon, packed, saddled, and hit the trail at daylight in the morning.

The vanguard of the land hungry had already penetrated to Fort George. Up and down the Nechaco valley, and bordering upon the Fraser, were the cabins of the pre-emptors. The roads were dotted with the teams of the incoming. A sizable town had sprung up around the old trading post.

"That's the way it's going," Bill remarked. "They come like bees when the rush starts." Bill remarked.

Then they came to the end, and they bore across country toward Pine river. Here and there certain landmarks, graven deep in Hazel's recollection, uprose to claim her attention, and one evening at sunset they rode up to the little cabin, all forlorn in its clearing.

Inside, a gray film of dust had accumulated on everything. The four rooms were oppressive with the musty odors that gather in a closed, untenanted house. But apart from that it stood as they had left it thirteen months before. No foot had crossed the threshold. The pile of wood and kindling lay beside the fireplace as Bill had placed it the morning they left.

"Be it ever so humble," Bill left the line of the old song unfinished. But his tone was full of jubilation. Between them they threw wide every door and window. The cool evening wind filled the place with sweet, pine-scented air. Then Bill started a blaze roaring in the black-mouthed fireplace —to make it look natural, he said—and went out to hobble his horses for the night.

In the morning they began to unpack their household goods. Rugs and blankets found each its accustomed place upon the floor. His books went back on the shelves. With magical swiftness the cabin resumed its old-time atmosphere. And that night Bill stretched himself on the grimly hide before the fireplace, and kept his nose in a book until Hazel, who was in no humor to read, fretted herself into something approaching a temper.

"You're about as sociable as a clam," she broke into his absorption at last.

He looked up in surprise, then chucked the volume carelessly aside, and twisted himself around till his head rested in her lap.

"Vot iss?" he asked cheerfully. "Lonesome? Bored with yourself? Ain't I here? Surely you don't feel yourself neglected because I happen to have my nose stuck in a book?"

"Of course not!" she denied vigorously. The childish absurdity of her attitude struck her with sudden force. "Still, I'd like you to talk to me once in a while."

Bill's eyes narrowed a trifle, but he still smiled. And suddenly he stepped around, behind her chair, put both hands under her chin, and tilted her head backward.

"Ah, you're plumb sick and tired to death of everything, aren't you?" he said soberly. "You've been up here too long. You sure need a change, I'll have to take you out and give you the freedom of the cities, let you dissipate and pink-tea, and rub elbows with the mob for a while. Then you'll be glad to drift back to this woodsy hiding place of ours. When do you want to start?"

"Why, Bill!" she protested.

But she realized in a flash that Bill could read her better than she could read herself. Few of her emotions could remain long hidden from that keenly observing and mercilessly logical mind. She knew that he guessed where she stood, and by what paths she had gotten there. Trust him to know. And it made her very tender toward him that he was so quick to understand. Most men would have resented.

"I want to stack a few tons of hay," he went on, disregarding her exclamation. "I'll need it in the spring, if not this winter. Soon as that's done we'll hit the high spots. We'll take three or four thousand dollars, and while it lasts we'll be a couple of—of high-class tramps. Huh? Does it sound good?"

She nodded vigorously.

"Perk up, then," he wheedled.

"Bill-boy," she murmured, "you mustn't take me too seriously."

"I took you for better or for worse," he answered, with a kiss. "I don't want it to turn out worse. I want you to be contented and happy here, where I've planned to make our home. I know you love me quite a lot, little person. Nature fitted us in a good many ways to be mates. But you've gone through a pretty drastic siege of isolation in this rather grim country, and I guess it doesn't seem such an alluring place as it did at first. I don't want you to nurse that feeling until it becomes chronic. Then we would be out of tune, and it would be good-by happiness. But I think I know the cure for your malady."

In the morning he began his hay cutting. About eleven o'clock he threw down his scythe and stalked to the house.

"Put on your hat, and let's go investigate a mystery," said he. "I heard a cow bawl in the woods a minute ago. A regular barnyard bellow."

"A cow bawling?" she echoed. "Sure? What would cattle be doing away up here?"

"That's what I want to know!" Bill laughed. "I've never seen a cow north of Fraser—not this side of the Rockies, anyway."

They saddled their horses, and rode out in the direction from whence had arisen the bovine complaint. The sound was not repeated, and Hazel had begun to chaff Bill about a too-vivid imagination when within a half mile of the clearing he pulled his horse up short in the middle of a little meadow.

"Look!"

The track of a broad-tired wagon had freshly crushed the thick grass. Bill squinted at the trail, then his gaze swept the timber beyond.

"Somebody has been cutting timber over there," he enlightened. "I can see the fresh ax work. Looks like they'd been hauling poles. Let's follow this track a ways."

The tiny meadow was fringed on the north by a grove of poplars. Beyond that lay another clear space of level land, perhaps forty acres in extent. They broke through the belt of poplars—and pulled up again. On one side of the meadow stood a cabin, the fresh-peeled log walls glaring yellow in the sun, and lifting a earth-covered roof to the autumn sky. Bill whistled softly.

Along the west side of the meadow ran a brown streak of sod, and down at one of this a man guided the handles of a plow drawn by the strangest yokemates Hazel's eyes had seen for years.

"For goodness' sake!" she exclaimed.

"That's the true pioneer spirit for you," Bill spoke absently. "He has bucked his way into the heart of a virgin country, and he's breaking sod with a nude cow. That's adaptation to environment with a vengeance—and grit."

"There's a woman, too, Bill. And see—she's carrying a baby!" Hazel pointed excitedly. "Oh, Bill!"

The man halted his strangely assorted team to watch them come. The woman stood a step outside the door, a baby in her arms, another toddler holding fast to her skirt. A thick-bodied, short, square-shouldered man was this newcomer, with a round, pleasant face.

"Hello, neighbor!" Bill greeted.

The pioneer lifted his old felt hat courteously. His face lit up.

"Ach!" said he. "Neighbor. Dot iss a good word in diss country vere dere iss no neighbor. But I am glat to meet you. Vill you come do der house und rest a vile?"

"Sure!" Bill responded. "But we're neighbors, all right. Did you notice a cabin about half a mile west of here? That's our place—when we're at home."

"So!" The word escaped with the peculiar rising inflection of the Teuton. "I half saw dot cabin ven we come here. But I dink it vass abandon. Vell, let us to der house go. Id vill rest der mule—und Gretchen, der cow. Hah!"

He rolled a blue eye on his incongruous team, and grinned widely.

"Come," he invited; "mine vife be glat."

They found her a matron of thirty-odd; fresh-cheeked, round-faced like her husband, typically German, without his accent of the Fatherland. Hazel at once appropriated the baby. It sat placidly in her lap, staring with wide-eyed, making soft, gurgly sounds.

"The little dear!" Hazel murmured.

"Later, our name is," the man said casually, when they were seated.

"Wagstaff, mine is," Bill completed the informal introduction.

"I am from Bavaria," Lauer told him. "Vill you smoke? I light mine bibe—mit your vife's permission.

"Yes," he continued, stuffing the bowl of his pipe with a stubby forefinger, "I am from Bavaria. Dere I vass upon a farm brought oop. I sert in der army my dime. Den Amerigo. Dere I marry my vife, who is born in Milwaukee. I vork in der big brewerie. After dot I learn to be a carpenter. Now I am a kink, mit a castle all mine own. I am no more a vage slafe."

"You're on the right track," Bill nodded. "It's a pity more people don't take the same notion. What do you think of this country, anyway?"

"It iss goot," Lauer answered briefly, and with unhesitating certainty. "It iss goot. Yor der boor man it iss—it iss salfation. Mit fife huntret tollars und hiss two hants he can himself some make—und a fling be sure off."

"No, I don't think 'TH ever get lonesome," she said. "I'm too glad to be here. And I've got lots of work and my babies. Of course, it's natural I'd miss a woman friend running in now and then to chat. But a person can't have it all. And I'd do anything to have a roof of our own, and to have it some place where our livin' don't depend on a pay envelope. Many a time I've sat and cried, just from thinkin' how bad I wanted a little place of our own, where there was grass and trees and a piece of ground for a garden. And I knew we'd never be able to buy it. We couldn't get ahead enough."

"Und so," her husband took up the tale, "I hear off dese country, vere lant can be for noddings got. Und so we scrape und pinch und safe nickels und dimes for fife year. Und here ve are. All der way from Visconsin in der vagon, yes. Mit two mules. In Ashcroft I buy der cow, so dot ve haf der fresh milk. Und dot iss lucky. For von mule he die on der road. So I am plaw oop der lant und haul my vagon mit von mule und Gretchen der cow."

Man—The Brute!

The fond mother had dropped in to see how her newly-married daughter was getting on.

"You look worried, dear!" she said anxiously.

"I am worried," snapped the bride. "I don't wonder! Such a time as I do have with that husband of mine! I don't have a minute's peace when he's in the house. He is always calling me to help him to do something or other.

"What sort of things does he want?"

"Well, last night he actually asked me to go all the way upstairs just to thread a needle for him, so that he could sew a button on his coat!"

Coal Production In Canada.

Nova Scotia led in coal production, with 6,324,684 tons, or a little more than three-sevenths of the total output. Alberta was second with 4,723,139 tons.

Children Cry for Fletcher's

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. SHE OF RED HAIR

Colors One With Titian Tresses Should Wear.

Different Color Pigment in Skin Than Blonde or Blackhaired Woman With Fair Skin.

No type of beauty can be more strikingly lovely than the red-haired woman, writes a famous creator of fashions. If the possessor of red hair understands how to dress to type she may make herself as vividly decorative as a mural painting.

"That stunning Miss So-and-So with the wonderful red hair" we hear so often, but alas, we also hear "There's poor Mary, such a sweet girl, but that awful red hair! If she only knew what to wear it might help, but what can you do with a girl like that?"

A red-haired woman should realize first of all that there is a different color pigment in her skin than that of the blonde or of the black-haired woman with fair skin.

The delicate shades that tone with the pink and white loveliness of the blonde are not so good when featured on the red-haired woman, although her complexion may possess that quality of extreme whiteness which so often accompanies red hair. The auburn, bronze or chestnut-haired type is another story. I am speaking of the woman with vivid red hair, who, if she were a boy, would be called "carrot top" or "red head."

The woman with red hair has been sentenced to wear blue for so many years that this color and red hair have become as traditional as the old theory that if you see a red-haired woman a white horse will soon appear.

Blue is the wrong color for the red-haired woman. No this isn't heresy. Blue makes her utterly commonplace. There is one shade of green-blue that Billie Burke, who is one of the loveliest of red-haired creatures, wears with supreme effect, but this shade is green first and blue afterwards—green blue—and even she wears it with great discretion.

Brown is another obvious color for the red-haired woman. If, however, brown is well done the sympathetic background of this color is good, but brown may also become very commonplace with red hair.

Black is an excellent foil for the woman with red hair. Clothed in black and the right lines she becomes distinguished looking as well as beautiful.

Given a good skin and dark enough lashes and brows, almost any red-haired woman should be able to make herself strikingly attractive.

There is a gray for everyone. Particularly for the possessor of red hair. Gray is color neutralized. Red, blue and green make gray. The various tones of gray are produced by the proportions of these three colors. The red-haired woman should wear the gray with lavender or violet predominating.

The red-haired woman should avoid blue, with the possible exception of the two-tones, gray blue and green blue mentioned above. Above all, she should not wear baby blue, turquoise, king's or robin's egg.

Green is an excellent color foil for red hair. Olive green makes an ideal street color, and chartreuse and emerald may be worn with extremely decorative effect in the evening. Bronze makes a better daylight choice than the lighter brown tones. Of the yellow, pale buff is good on the red-haired woman.

IN PRINCESS GOWN

Favored Frock Not Affected by Downfall of Royalty.

Women Cling to Some Version of This Type of Dress—New Evening Style

The general downfall of royalty seems to have affected not one whit the princess frock. Always there are women of fashion who cling to some version of this type of dress. This year there are quite a few New York

Of course, the princess of this year is a very different affair from that tightly molded dress which policed the figure some years ago. Very often the distinctive touch is confined to one side and draping is arranged so skillfully that the line is becoming to both slim and not so.

A new evening frock is of white taffeta embroidered in silver and combined with silver lace, which gives an echo of the princess mode on one side only. Like so many of the evening frocks at present, an ostrich plume is employed as the climax of trimming. Both are as familiar in dress scenery as they are in desert scenery.

LONGER AND WIDER SKIRTS

Conservative Styles Are Predicted by the Fashion Art League at Chicago Convention.

Feminine styles the coming fall are to be much different from those now prevailing—much different.

Skirts will be longer—much wider—more conservative.

And in this connection there is a war just starting—a war by American women to make the style more conservative.

This was the news coming from within the Fashion Art league, in convention recently in Chicago. The doughboy is at the bottom of the whole thing. In France the Parisenne beauties wear extreme styles. When the doughboy struck that country he was dazzled. Styles became more and more extreme, and when he started home he was full of new ideas of styles, but the American girls rebelled—they went on a fashion strike, demanding new styles.

The correct skirt length, according to Madame Alin Ripley, president of the league, should be six to eight inches above the ground. Of course, the width will be built around the person, but generosity will be plentiful among the designers, it was pointed out. Forty-seven inches was agreed on as the average width for the slender person.

FASHION BREVITIES

Yellow is introduced on navy blue serge frocks for the growing girl by means of wool embroidery or pipings.

Purple chiffon over red velvet in a negligee is almost exotic in its beauty.

Cadet plaits are the means employed to acquire the popular ripple effect in a coat suit.

An imported overblouse of gold colored georgette has monkey fur about the sleeves and skirt hem.

Irish crochet blouses are new for fall.

Blouse coats are really becoming only to small women.

A little bag of fine gold-plated mesh is always smart.

The gowns that combine pink and blue are decidedly French.

The bigger and more crushable a sash is the more stylish it is.

Improve Fertility of Soil.

Every farmer is interested in getting large crops and ample profits this year. This is laudable and highly desirable. But good crops will be needed next year and the years that follow. To make this possible the soil must have such culture as will improve its fertility.

Trouble In Fighting Weeds.

Some of the trouble and expense ordinarily experienced in fighting weeds might be dispensed with by keeping sheep and goats to graze the noxious plants. At present prices for wool, mohair and mutton these animals ought to be profitable.

ARSENIC DESTROYS TREES.

Often Desirable to Employ Some Method Surer Than Girdling.

In cleaning up pasture land or clearing new land for crops it is often desirable to kill trees by some method surer and quicker than the old-time method of girdling. In dealing with the kinds of trees which sprout from the stump, such as the oaks, hickories, and red gum, a reliable method of killing is especially needed.

For the purpose of poisoning trees, arsenic has been successfully used in both this and other countries, often killing trees in a few weeks or a few days which by the simple girdling process would require months. Useful directions for making up a poison solution for quick and effective work in all kind of timber, together with the method of application are given below, quoted from a recent number of the Australia Forestry Journal. In Australia, it appears, much investigation has been widely used with excellent results.

The following is the formula:—
Arsenic, 1 pound.
Whiting, ½ pound.
Water, 4 gallons.
Washing soda, 1 pound, or caustic soda, ½ pound.

Since the ordinary white arsenious oxide of commerce is not soluble in water to any great degree, soda has to be used for the purpose. When large amounts of the poison are desired washing soda will be cheaper, but for small amounts caustic soda will perhaps be found the handiest.

To prepare the solution, first dissolve the soda (either form) in a convenient amount of water, using heat, if desirable, to assist and hasten it; then slowly add the arsenic, previously made into a thin paste (as the housewife treats her cornflour), stirring all the time; place on a strong fire, and after it has come to the boil, allow it to remain boiling for at least half an hour; stir from time to time, and be careful to stand on the side away from the fumes, as, being poisonous they are apt to cause sickness. When the arsenic is thoroughly dissolved, the solution may be made up to the required bulk by adding the remainder of the water, either hot or cold. The whiting is added merely to serve as an indicator of the trees treated, as it turns white on drying.

The best time for carrying on the operation of poisoning is when the tree is dormant, or during the winter months. This will most surely prevent suckering, although trees can be killed practically any time of the year.

In applying the poison, the tree is first girdled by a series of heavy downward strokes of the ax through the bark and well into the wood, leaving the chips protruding outward in a "frill" extending completely around the tree. It is necessary that this "frilling" process be thoroughly done, which alone would ordinarily kill the tree after some time. A half pint for small trees to a quart for very large trees of the poison is then poured into the chipped surface, taking care to saturate the wood thoroughly. An old teapot or kettle with a spout serves well the purpose of pouring without needless waste or spilling down the trees. Saplings may be cut off low down and the poison applied over the stump by a swab stick. If this is done when the sap is down the tree will be completely killed and suckering prevented.

Best Time for Cultivation.

If it is not possible to give the young plants a good cultivation on time go over the ground and do the best you can, then cultivate again as soon as possible. The important point is to cultivate when the ground is in the proper condition.

Big Appetite for Bugs.

A cliff swallow will eat a thousand flies, mosquitoes, wheat-midgets or beetles that injure fruit trees in a day and therefore are to be encouraged, says the American Forestry Association, of Washington, which is conducting the nation-wide campaign among school children for bird-house building. This bird is also known as the eave swallow because it plasters its nest on the outside of a barn or other building up under the eaves. Colonies of several thousand will build their nests together on the side of a cliff. These nests shaped like a flattened gourd or water-bottle are made of bits of clay rolled into pellets and lined with straw or feathers. This bird winters in the tropics.

Khaki Farmers.

A distinct innovation in the problem of the re-establishment of soldiers is promised by the Agricultural Department of the Province of Alberta in the form of "training farms" for soldier settlers in the sunny province. One of these will be located at Vermilion and the other near Carstairs, and both will open about the first of November. At the former place there will be received for a practical course of training in farm practice veterans who have had at least three months of actual farming experience, while the Carstairs farm will be open to men with no practical farm experience whatsoever. The stipulation is made that intending students for either farm course must have in their possession at least 10 per cent. of the amount of loan they are asking from the Soldiers' Settlement Board. Altogether one hundred and fifty applicants can be accommodated during the course, which will conclude in both schools early in March of next year. If it can be put into practice without an unreasonable expenditure and with little loss of time, the idea is a good one and should redound to the material benefit of one hundred and fifty men who are anxious to become efficient farmers.

GOWNS TO MATCH HANGINGS

Recent Fad is to Have Apparel Harmonize With Draperies and Appointments of the Boudoir.

One of the latest fads of fashion is the elaborate room gown designed to harmonize with the hangings and appointments of the boudoir itself and for these rose pink brocade, French blue, and metal brocades are the fad requisition.

A shimmery gold and blue brocade, light in effect, has been used for one of these. It is cut on kimono lines, but softly draped at either side of the front. Dull gold braid, oddly tasseled in gilt and black beads, makes an edge finish, and a single large motif of the braid marks the fastening at one side. The garment is lined in chiffon of the shade of light Parma violets, and the whole suggests a setting done in dainty French boudoir style.

FASHIONS IN BRIEF

Black chantilly is among the old laces revived.

New glove colors for fall are very soft and rich.

Printed georgette is now being used for separate blouses.

Tiny curled feathers are used as trimming on fabric hats.

Many of the extremely low necks are now being veiled with tulle.

Redingote styles are made in strictly tailored effects in broadcloths and twilled fabrics.

FAD FOR KNITTED SWEATERS

Hip-Ruffling Warmers, the Exclusive of Yesterday, Become the Commonplace of Today.

Only a very few weeks ago there was a prediction on the part of those who were in the vanguard of fashion for knitted sweaters that ruffled just below the waist and showed a sleeve that was baggy just above the wrist. They were worn by the most exclusive, it was said; and at the resorts you might see them worn by those who haunted the most expensive hotels or who dwelt in the most palatial of cottages. But now—these hip-ruffling sweaters are as common and as usual as enormous ear horns. Every other young girl that leaves shop or office for her little two weeks vacation either takes that sort of sweater with her or knits one while she is away. And so it is. The exclusive of yesterday becomes the commonplace of today and the commonplace of today finds its place in the mission box of tomorrow.

Supreme in Sports

YOU'VE watched a team of hockey players sweeping down the ice! Have you ever seen anything more exhilarating, anything more characteristic of the team work, resourcefulness and stamina of Canadian Youth?

More Ontario boys play hockey than any other sport. There is perhaps nowhere a sporting organization like the Ontario Hockey Association. W. A. Hewitt, Sporting Editor of The Toronto Star is secretary of this Association. He knows Hockey—that is why there is such full and authoritative hockey news in

The Toronto Star

What is true of hockey news in The Star is true of practically every other department of sport. The Sporting Editor — expert in Hockey—is equally at home in other sports—Baseball, Boxing, Football, Lacrosse, Horse Racing. He has on his staff a group of sporting writers the like of which no other Canadian paper has ever gathered together—including Major L. E. Marsh, known to Hockey or Athletic fans everywhere; Francis Nelson, one of the most distinguished sporting writers in the country; Lieut. Bob Hayes, the Soccer expert; R. H. Reville, golf authority; Athol Gow, enthusiast on Amateur Baseball; Charlie Good, widely known sporting writer; W. M. Tackaberry, bowling expert—and many others.

Sports provide recreation and training, both physical and mental, for our upstanding youth. No one can pretend to a full knowledge of the life of the community without keeping in touch with the world of sports. That is why The Star makes its Sports Department excel.

But you do not have to be a follower of sports to realize that The Star is

Canada's Greatest Newspaper

The huge circulation The Star enjoys throughout Ontario to-day has been gained by giving its readers extreme value. Always in the forefront of progressive movements, The Star cares less for "party" than it does for principles and causes, and so justifies its slogan — "A Newspaper, not an Organ." A LIVE newspaper—full of news, full of ideas, well illustrated, entertaining, informing, stimulating.

A three months' subscription will convince you. Sign the coupon and mail it—take this great paper into your home on trial. The Star will come to you daily for 3 months for $1.25—for 6 months, $2.00—for a year, $3.00.

Methodists and Presbyterians are cordially invited to join with Anglicans in St. Mary Magdalene church on Monday, January 12th, at 7.30 p.m. for the first of the meetings to be held next week for united intercession in connection with the Forward Movement. An address will be given by the Rev. Canon W. F. Fitzgerald, M. A., Rector of St. Paul's church, Kingston.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Belleville, on December 23rd, when Miss Ruth Weese, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Weese, was married to Stanley Parks, Napanee. The happy couple left the next day for Napanee where they will take up their residence. The lovely gifts which she received testified to the esteem and affection in which she is held.

Frederick Scales, aged sixteen years, of Verona, who pleaded guilty to opening a switch at Verona, Dec. 20th, which resulted in a C. P. R. passenger train running into some freight cars, but which, fortunately, resulted in only slight injuries to some of the passengers, was sentenced by Magistrate Farrell to a term in the Ontario Reformatory not to be less than three months and not to exceed two years less a day. A petition was presented to the magistrate urging clemency.

James Charles Hughes, aged 22, of Detroit, Mich., was arrested by Chief Barrett on Tuesday, charged with fraud. He deposited a small amount of money in the Savings Department of the Royal Bank, secured a pass book and some checks, and started in to work local tradesmen for goods, tendering a check in payment and securing a balance in cash. His career in Napanee was cut short as he only succeeded in getting a small quantity of goods before his arrest. It was also learned he had operated in Picton, several people having cashed bogus checks for him.

New Use for Eucalyptus.

A method of using the bark of a large variety of eucalyptus trees for commercial purposes has been discovered in Australia, according to the weekly bulletin of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce. It is reported that from the bark there can be made a fibre suitable for the manufacture of twine, rope and bagging of a quality equal to the best flax and Indian jute goods at half the cost of the latter.

The inventor of the process is said to have been experimenting fifteen years, and now has available for inspection in a factory near Melbourne samples of binder twine, lighter and heavy rope, and bags for agricultural products. It is said that every particle of the fibre can be used either in the manufacture of the articles named or as waste for furniture stuffing, fibrous plaster work, packing refrigerator chambers, and like purposes.

So far as can be ascertained, the bark first is passed through a "softening" machine, which loosens out the fibres, and then through carding and spinning machines specially adapted to the purpose. The supply of raw material is practically inexhaustible, and can be had for the cost of collecting and transportation to the factory.

Wild Animals.

The re-stocking of the various "zoos" is a very costly affair these days. Even before the war animals—especially rare ones—fetched high prices and specimens to the value of one million pounds sterling changed hands every year in Hamburg. African lions to-day fetch anything from £75 to £250 each, according to size. The giraffe if a good specimen, is worth from £1,000 to £1,500. The rhinoceros fetches from £800 to £1,000. Zebras sell at from £200 to £400. These animals are valuable on account of the difficulty in catching them. On occasion as many as 5,000 natives are requisitioned for zebra "drives." In conjunction with all this new business, it is interesting to note that a new concern, the World's Zoological Trading Company, has been formed to capture the animal trade from German hands.
